NEED/IMPACT:

The Group Violence Intervention (GVI) initiative is known by various names, including Operation Ceasefire (as used in Boston); it is focused on reducing homicides and gun violence. Research has proven that a small number of identifiable street groups commit crime putting the people in the community at risk. There are three core tactics of GVI: 1) a sincere, moral message against committing violence; 2) a credible law enforcement message about the group consequences of further violence; and 3) a genuine offer of social services to members of street groups (to leave and make positive changes). GVI aims to build partnerships between law enforcement, social service agencies, and community residents. GVI has been successfully implemented in various cities such as, Chicago, Detroit, Boston, Lowell, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, and New Orleans. The outcomes were significant. Boston saw a 63% reduction in youth homicide, Indianapolis had a 34% drop in homicides, and Lowell had a 44% decrease in gun assaults. The DeKalb County Police Department aims to replicate similar decreases in crime across its communities.
